Our commitment to quality

The Financial Times employs more than 600 journalists, including some of the world's most respected commentators on business, finance and politics. People like…

• Chief economics commentator, Martin Wolf - a forum fellow at the annual meeting of the World Economic Forum in Davos since 1999 and a member of its International Media Council since 2006.

• Investment editor, John Authers – a frequent contributor on global media including the BBC, CNN, and MSNBC, and recently honoured as the UK's Investment Journalist of the Year for his FT.com coverage of the early days of the financial crisis.

• Columnist Lucy Kellaway, whose weekly columns have elegantly skewered management fads, jargon and office life for more than a decade.

In addition to supporting top-notch journalism, we have been working hard to expand our digital offering in order to add value to your subscription. Thanks to our web app and Android app , now it's easier than ever to get the news and vital insight you need - wherever you are and whenever you need it. Your existing username and password give you instant access on mobile devices.

If you're not one of the million-plus customers that has already downloaded an award-winning FT app to your smartphone or tablet, I encourage you to do so by visiting FT.com/mobile from your mobile device. We have improved functionality, content coverage, download speed and further enhancements are in the pipeline.

This is all part of our commitment to delivering the best possible subscription experience across all channels – online, on your mobile device and in print.
